Register Editorial: Weak rules for care facilities worsen

If you've ever worked at a nursing home or in any industry where it is allowed to regulate, you know what I'm talking about. It's a world of death and dying.

Two years ago, I spoke at a panel of state health officials about the regulations that are in place. We discussed the need for more regulations, and I believed that we could make the industry better for patients, and make it more difficult for the industry to make money.

Unfortunately, the issue of nursing home regulations is one that is constantly on the minds of all nurses and medical professionals. The problem is that the rules and regulations are constantly changing, and it is difficult to keep up with them.

One of the rules that I believe is a problem is the rule that nursing homes must have a nurse on duty at all times. This rule is a good one, and it is one that I believe is necessary. However, when I asked how many nurses are actually on duty at all times, I was told that it is difficult to keep track of the number of nurses on duty.

Another rule that I believe is a problem is the rule that nursing homes must have a nurse on duty at all times. This rule is a good one, and it is one that I believe is necessary. However, when I asked how many nurses are actually on duty at all times, I was told that it is difficult to keep track of the number of nurses on duty.

I believe that the rules and regulations for nursing homes are a good thing, and that they help to keep the industry in check. However, I also believe that the rules and regulations need to be updated, and that more nurses need to be on duty at all times.
